JAKE HOFFMAN LEADS PROSPECTIVE FIELD TO REPLACE ANDY BIGGS IN AZ-5

Phoenix, AZ – Last month, Congressman Andy Biggs announced his candidacy for Governor of Arizona, leaving his seat in the US House of Representatives up for grabs. Arizona's 5th District, spanning the southeastern suburbs of Phoenix, is a safe Republican seat, meaning the real battle to succeed Biggs will be in the Republican primary election, not in the general election.

We conducted a poll of likely Republican primary voters to determine which potential candidate(s) would be in the strongest position to fill his seat. Our hypothetical ballot included a mix of declared contenders such as Travis Grantham, widely-rumored contenders such as Jake Hoffman, and other prominent Republican figures like Justin Olson and Michael Way who haven't yet publicly expressed any interest in the race. Though the election is still nearly a year and a half away, and many voters remain undecided, here's where each candidate stands as of today:

AZ-5 Republican Primary Ballot (Decided Voters)
Jake Hoffman	32.5%
Michael Way	21.7%
Travis Grantham	18.8%
Justin Olson	14.9%
Travis Padilla	12.1%

Jake Hoffman is the clear leader, with just under a third of decided voters backing him. Michael Way is next with just under 22% support, followed by Travis Grantham, Justin Olson, and Travis Padilla. Hoffman and Way both currently represent Arizona's 15th state legislative district, which makes up a plurality of the AZ-5 GOP base. Together, they command a majority of the vote, in large part due to their popularity among supporters of President Trump. For instance, among self-identified Donald Trump MAGA Republicans (a group which makes up 51% of the primary electorate), Hoffman and Way command a combined 64% of the vote. Grantham, on the other hand, leads the pack among Traditional Republicans, but this group makes up only about 13% of the electorate.

This poll was conducted February 14-16, 2025 among likely Republican primary voters throughout Arizona's 5th Congressional District, using a combination of Interactive Voice Response and Text-To-Web response collection methods.
